The date is April 12, 1861. You and other residents of Charleston, South Carolina, watch the bombardment of Fort Sumter by Confederate forces. This event signals the beginning of the Civil War—a war between factions or regions of the same country.

How might a civil war be worse than other wars?

What Do You Think?

- What social, political, and economic problems might be likely to occur in a civil war?
- What might happen when a civil war breaks out?

People watch the bombardment from their rooftops.

March 9, 1862
The warships Monitor and Merrimack (or Virginia) clash.

April 6, 1862
Battle of Shiloh takes place.

April 25, 1862
New Orleans falls to Union forces.

May 5, 1862
French troops are defeated at Puebla, Mexico.

June 25, 1862
Imperial decree expels foreigners from Japan.

September 17, 1862
Battle of Antietam (Sharpsburg) occurs.

September, 1862
Bismarck becomes prime minister of Prussia.

The Civil War Begins 479
CHAPTER 16

Reading Strategy: Comparing and Contrasting

What Do You Know?
What do you think of when you hear the phrase civil war? What would it be like to fight in a war of brother against brother? Where and how did the Civil War begin?

Think About
• what a civil war is
• what you’ve learned about the Civil War from movies, television, and books
• reasons that countries threaten to break apart in today’s world
• your responses to the Interact with History about how a civil war is worse than other wars (see page 479)

What Do You Want to Know?
What details do you need to help you understand the outbreak of the Civil War? Make a list of those details in your notebook before you read the chapter.

Comparing and Contrasting
When you compare, you look for similarities between two or more objects, ideas, events, or people. When you contrast, you look for differences. Comparing and contrasting can be a useful strategy for studying the two sides in a war. Use the chart shown here to compare and contrast the North and the South in the early years of the Civil War.

Taking Notes

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>North</th>
<th>South</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Reasons for fighting</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advantages</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disadvantages</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Military strategy</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battle victories</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

These are the Union flag (left) and a Confederate battle flag (right).
War Erupts

MAIN IDEA
The secession of the Southern states quickly led to armed conflict between the North and the South.

WHY IT MATTERS NOW
The nation’s identity was in part forged by the Civil War.

TERMS & NAMES
Fort Sumter
Robert E. Lee border state
King Cotton
Anaconda Plan
blockade
First Battle of Bull Run

ONE AMERICAN’S STORY
Like other South Carolinians, Emma Holmes got caught up in the passions that led her state to secede. In her diary, she wrote about South Carolina’s attack on Fort Sumter, a federal fort in Charleston’s harbor.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST
[A]t half past four this morning, the heavy booming of cannons woke the city from its slumbers. . . . Every body seems relieved that what has been so long dreaded has come at last and so confident of victory that they seem not to think of the danger of their friends. . . . With the telescope I saw the shots as they struck the fort and [saw] the masonry crumbling.

Emma Holmes, The Diary of Emma Holmes 1861–1866

Many Southerners expected a short war that they would easily win. Northerners expected the same. In this section, you will learn how the war started, how the states divided, and how each side planned to win.

First Shots at Fort Sumter
As they seceded from the Union (the states loyal to the United States of America during the Civil War), the Southern states took over most of the federal forts inside their borders. President Abraham Lincoln had to decide what to do about the forts that remained under federal control. Major Robert Anderson and his garrison held on to Fort Sumter in the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, but they were running out of supplies.

If Lincoln supplied the garrison, he risked war. If he ordered the troops to leave the fort, he would be giving in to the rebels. Lincoln informed South Carolina that he was sending supply ships to Fort Sumter. Leaders of the Confederacy (the nation formed by Southern states in 1861) decided to prevent the federal government from holding onto the fort by attacking before the supply ships arrived.
At 4:30 A.M. on April 12, 1861, shell guns opened fire on the island fort. For 34 hours, the Confederates fired shells into the fort until Anderson was forced to surrender. No one was killed, but the South’s attack on Fort Sumter was the beginning of the Civil War.

Lincoln Calls Out the Militia

Two days after the surrender of Fort Sumter, President Lincoln asked the Union states to provide 75,000 militiamen for 90 days to put down the uprising in the South. Citizens of the North responded with enthusiasm to the call to arms. A New York woman wrote, “It seems as if we never were alive till now; never had a country till now.”

In the upper South, however, state leaders responded with anger. The governor of Kentucky said that the state would “furnish no troops for the wicked purpose of subduing her sister Southern States.” In the weeks that followed, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Arkansas voted to join the Confederacy.

As each state seceded, volunteers rushed to enlist, just as citizens did in the North. A young Arkansas enlistee wrote, “So impatient did I become for starting that I felt like ten thousand pins were pricking me in every part of the body, and started off a week in advance of my brothers.” Some feared the war would be over before they got the chance to fight.

With Virginia on its side, the Confederacy had a much better chance for victory. Virginia was wealthy and populous, and the Confederacy in May of 1861 moved its capital to Richmond. Virginia also was the home of Robert E. Lee, a talented military leader. When Virginia seceded, Lee resigned from the United States Army and joined the Confederacy. Although Lee opposed slavery and secession, he explained, “I cannot raise my hand against my birthplace, my home, my children.” He eventually became the commanding general of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Choosing Sides

After Virginia seceded, both sides knew that the border states would play a key role in the war’s outcome. The border states—Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri—were slave states that bordered states in which slavery was illegal. Because of their location and resources, the border states could tip the scales toward one side.

Keeping Maryland in the Union was important for the North. If Maryland seceded, then Washington, D.C., would be cut off from the Union. To hold on to the state, Lincoln considered arresting Maryland lawmakers who backed the South, but he decided against it.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

1809–1865

Today, Abraham Lincoln is considered one of the great men of all time. Yet early in his presidency, he was widely criticized and ridiculed. Critics labeled him ignorant, incompetent, and socially crude. As Lincoln grew into his job, however, he gained the respect and affection of many Northerners.

Even as a youth, Lincoln had displayed a gift for public speaking. During the Civil War, through his speeches and writings, Lincoln inspired fellow Americans to “dare to do our duty as we understand it.”

Why would the ability to inspire people be important in a wartime leader?
Pro-Union leaders eventually gained control of the Maryland legislature, and the state stayed in the Union.

Kentucky was also important to both sides because of its rivers. For the Union, the rivers could provide an invasion route into the South. For the South, the rivers could provide a barrier. Kentuckians were deeply divided over secession. However, a Confederate invasion in 1861 prompted the state to stay in the Union.

Both Missouri and Delaware also stayed in the Union. In Virginia, federal troops helped a group of western counties break away. These counties formed the state of West Virginia and returned to the Union. In the end, 24 states made up the Union and 11 joined the Confederacy.

Strengths and Weaknesses

The Union had huge advantages in manpower and resources. The North had about 22 million people. The Confederacy had roughly 9 million, of whom about 3.5 million were slaves. About 85 percent of the nation’s factories were located in the North. The North had more than double the railroad mileage of the South. Almost all the naval power and shipyards belonged to the North.

The Union’s greatest asset, however, was President Abraham Lincoln. He developed into a remarkable leader. Lincoln convinced Northerners that democracy depended on preserving the Union.
The Confederacy had some advantages, too. It began the war with able generals, such as Robert E. Lee. It also had the advantage of fighting a defensive war. This meant Northern supply lines would have to be stretched very far. In addition, soldiers defending their homes have more will to fight than invaders do.

The Confederate Strategy

At first, the Confederacy took a defensive position. It did not want to conquer the North—it only wanted to be independent. “All we ask is to be let alone,” said Confederate President Jefferson Davis. Confederate leaders hoped the North would soon tire of the war and accept Southern independence.

The South also depended on King Cotton as a way to win foreign support. Cotton was king because Southern cotton was important in the world market. The South grew most of the cotton for Europe’s textile mills. When the war broke out, Southern planters withheld cotton from the market. They hoped to force France and Britain to aid the Confederate cause. But in 1861, European nations had surplus cotton because of a big crop the year before. They did not want to get involved in the American war.

As the war heated up, the South soon moved away from its cautious plans. It began to take the offensive and try for big victories to wreck Northern morale.

The Union Strategy

The North wanted to bring the Southern states back into the Union. To do this, the North developed an offensive strategy based on General Winfield Scott’s Anaconda Plan. This plan was designed to smother the South’s economy like a giant anaconda snake squeezing its prey.

The plan called for a naval blockade of the South’s coastline. In a blockade, armed forces prevent the transportation of goods or people into or out of an area. The plan also called for the Union to gain control of the Mississippi River. This would split the Confederacy in two.

One of the drawbacks of Scott’s plan was that it would take time to work. But many people, eager for action, were calling for an immediate attack on Richmond, the Confederate capital. Lincoln ordered an invasion of Virginia in the summer of 1861.
Battle of Bull Run

To take Richmond, the Union army would first have to defeat the Confederate troops stationed at the town of Manassas, Virginia. This was a railway center southwest of Washington, D.C.

On July 21, 1861, Union forces commanded by General Irvin McDowell clashed with Confederate forces headed by General Pierre Beauregard near a little creek called Bull Run north of Manassas. In the North, this battle came to be known as the First Battle of Bull Run.

At one point in the battle, a Confederate officer rallied his troops by pointing his sword toward Southern General Thomas J. Jackson. The officer cried, “There is Jackson standing like a stone wall! Rally behind the Virginians!” From this incident, Jackson won the nickname “Stonewall” Jackson. His men held fast against the Union assault.

As fresh troops arrived, the Confederates equaled the Union forces in number and launched a countercharge. Attacking the Union line, they let out a blood-curdling scream. This scream, later called the “rebek yell,” caused the Union troops to panic. They broke ranks and scattered.

The Confederate victory in the First Battle of Bull Run thrilled the South and shocked the North. Many in the South thought the war was won. The North realized it had underestimated its opponent. Lincoln sent the 90-day militias home and called for a real army of 500,000 volunteers for three years. In the next section, you will learn what army life was like.
Life in the Army

MAIN IDEA
Both Union and Confederate soldiers endured many hardships serving in the army during the Civil War.

WHY IT MATTERS NOW
The hardships endured led to long-lasting bitterness on both sides.

TERMS & NAMES
hygiene rifle minié ball
ironclad

ONE AMERICAN’S STORY
In 1862, Peter Vredenburgh, Jr., answered President Lincoln’s call for an additional 300,000 soldiers. Nearly 26 years old, Vredenburgh became a major in the 14th Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry. Less than two months after joining the regiment, he wrote a letter urging his parents to keep his 18-year-old brother from enlisting.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST
I am glad that Jim has not joined any Regt. [regiment] and I hope he never will. I would not have him go for all my pay; it would be very improbable that we could both go through this war and come out unharmed. Let him come here and see the thousands with their arms and legs off, or if that won’t do, let him go as I did the other day through the Frederick hospitals and see how little account a man’s life and limbs are held in by others.

Major Peter Vredenburgh, Jr., quoted in Upon the Tented Field

On September 19, 1864, Vredenburgh was killed in battle. In this section, you will learn more about other soldiers and what their experiences were like.

Those Who Fought
Like Peter Vredenburgh, the majority of soldiers in the Civil War were between 18 and 30 years of age. But both the Confederate and Union armies had younger and older soldiers. Charles Carter Hay was just 11 years old when he joined an Alabama regiment. William Wilkins was 83 when he became one of the Pennsylvania Home Guards.

Farmers made up the largest group among Civil War soldiers. About half the soldiers on both sides came from farms. Having rarely traveled far from their fields, many viewed going off to war as an exciting adventure. Some rode a train for the first time.
Although the majority of soldiers in the war were born in the United States, immigrants from other countries also served. German and Irish immigrants made up the largest ethnic groups. One regiment from New York had soldiers who were born in 15 foreign countries. The commanding officer gave orders in seven languages.

At the beginning of the war, African Americans wanted to fight. They saw the war as a way to end slavery. However, neither the North nor the South accepted African Americans into their armies. As the war dragged on, the North finally took African Americans into its ranks. Native Americans served on both sides.

In all, about 2 million American soldiers served the Union, and fewer than 1 million served the Confederacy. The vast majority were volunteers. Why did so many Americans volunteer to fight? Many sought adventure and glory. Some sought an escape from the boredom of farm and factory work. Some signed up because their friends and neighbors were doing it. Others signed up for the recruitment money offered by both sides. Soldiers also fought because they were loyal to their country or state.

Turning Civilians into Soldiers

After enlisting, a volunteer was sent to a nearby army camp for training. A typical camp looked like a sea of canvas tents. The tents were grouped by company, and each tent held from two to twenty men. In winter, the soldiers lived in log huts or in heavy tents positioned on a log base. In the Civil War, recruits in training elected their company officers. Both the Union and Confederate armies followed this practice.

A soldier in training followed a set schedule. A bugle or drum awakened the soldier at dawn. After roll call and breakfast, the soldier had the first of several drill sessions. In between drills and meals, soldiers performed guard duty, cut wood for the campfires, dug trenches for latrines (outdoor toilets), and cleaned up the camp.

Shortly after they came to camp, new recruits were given uniforms and equipment. Union soldiers wore blue uniforms, and Confederate soldiers wore gray or

---

A. Summarizing

How did most men in the North and the South feel about going off to war?

A. Answer

Most were excited by the idea of adventure and committed to doing their duty for their country.
yellowish-brown uniforms. Getting a uniform of the right size was a problem, however. On both sides, soldiers traded items to get clothing that fit properly.

Early in the war, Northern soldiers received clothing of very poor quality. Contractors took advantage of the government’s need and supplied shoddy goods. Shoes made of imitation leather, for example, fell apart when they got wet. In the Confederacy, some states had trouble providing uniforms at all, while others had surpluses. Because the states did not always cooperate and share supplies, Confederate soldiers sometimes lacked shoes. Like soldiers in the Revolutionary War, they marched over frozen ground in bare feet. After battles, needy soldiers took coats, boots, and other clothing from the dead.

At the beginning of the war, most soldiers in army camps received plenty of food. Their rations included beef or salt pork, flour, vegetables, and coffee. But when they were in the field, the soldiers’ diet became more limited. Some soldiers went hungry because supply trains could not reach them.

Hardships of Army Life

Civil War soldiers in the field were often wet, muddy, or cold from marching outdoors and living in crude shelters. Many camps were unsanitary and smelled from the odors of garbage and latrines. One Union soldier described a camp near Washington. In the camp, cattle were killed to provide the troops with meat.

---

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

The hides and [waste parts] of the [cattle] for miles upon miles around, under a sweltering sun and sultry showers, would gender such swarms of flies, armies of worms, blasts of stench and oceans of filth as to make life miserable.

William Keesy, quoted in The Civil War Infantryman

---

Not only were the camps filthy, but so were the soldiers. They often went weeks without bathing or washing their clothes. Their bodies, clothing, and bedding became infested with lice and fleas.

Poor hygiene—conditions and practices that promote health—resulted in widespread sickness. Most soldiers had chronic diarrhea or other intestinal disorders. These disorders were caused by contaminated water or food or by germ-carrying insects. People did not know that germs cause diseases. Doctors failed to wash their hands or their instruments. An observer described how surgeons “armed with long, bloody knives and saws, cut and sawed away with frightful rapidity, throwing the mangled limbs on a pile nearby as soon as removed.”

---

Background

Before uniforms became standardized, soldiers dressed in outfits supplied from home. This caused confusion on the battlefield.
Changes in Military Technology

While camp life remained rough, military technology advanced. Improvements in the weapons of war had far-reaching effects. Battle tactics changed, and casualties soared.

Rifles that used minié balls contributed to the high casualty rate in the Civil War. A rifle is a gun with a grooved barrel that causes a bullet to spin through the air. This spin gives the bullet more distance and accuracy. The minié ball is a bullet with a hollow base. The bullet expands upon firing to fit the grooves in the barrel. Rifles with minié balls could shoot farther and more accurately than old-fashioned muskets. As a result, mounted charges and infantry assaults did not work as well. Defenders using rifles could shoot more of the attackers before they got close.

Ironclads, warships covered with iron, proved to be a vast improvement over wooden ships. In the first ironclad battle, the Confederate Virginia (originally named the Merrimack) battled the Union Monitor off the coast of Virginia in 1862. After hammering away for about four hours, the battle ended in a draw. (See page 492 for more information on ironclads.)

Despite new technology and tactics, neither side gained a decisive victory in the first two years of the war, as you will see in the next section.
Ironclads

They moved through the water, as one observer put it, “like a huge, half-submerged crocodile.” To crew members of traditional wooden ships, the ironclads indeed may have seemed like horrible mechanical monsters.

With a powerful iron hull almost entirely under water and a rotating gun turret, or short tower, an ironclad easily destroyed the older vessels it met. When the Monitor and the Merrimack (or Virginia) clashed during the Civil War in the first battle ever waged between ironclads, a new era of naval warfare had begun. Below is a closer look at the Union’s Monitor.

SCALE AND SIZE OF WARSHIPS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class, Name, Launch Date</th>
<th>Length</th>
<th>Weight</th>
<th>Number of Crew</th>
<th>Weaponry</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ironclad (USS Monitor) 1862</td>
<td>172 ft.</td>
<td>987 tons</td>
<td>49</td>
<td>two 11-inch smoothbore cannons</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Battleship (USS Maine) 1889</td>
<td>319 ft.</td>
<td>6,682 tons</td>
<td>374</td>
<td>four 10-inch guns, six 6-inch guns, seven rapid-fire 6-pounders, four torpedo tubes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nuclear Submarine (USS Nautilus) 1954</td>
<td>324 ft.</td>
<td>4,092 tons</td>
<td>105</td>
<td>six torpedo tubes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aircraft Carrier (USS Nimitz) 1972</td>
<td>1,092 ft.</td>
<td>95,000 tons</td>
<td>6,000</td>
<td>24 F-14A Tomcat warplanes, 16 radar guided missiles, six-barrel, 20-millimeter Gatling gun</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CONNECT TO HISTORY

1. Drawing Conclusions Why would a rotating gun be an advantage in a naval battle?

CONNECT TO TODAY

2. Researching Find out more about modern battleships or aircraft carriers, and write a brief report about their capabilities in battle.

For more about military ships . . .

RESEARCH LINKS

CLASSZONE.COM
In the summer of 1861, President Lincoln gave George McClellan command of the Union army in the East. The army had recently been defeated at Bull Run. Within months, McClellan restored the soldiers’ confidence and organized and trained an army that could defeat the Confederates. But while Lincoln kept urging him to attack Richmond, McClellan kept drilling his troops.

Soon as I feel that my army is well organized and well disciplined and strong enough, I will advance and force the Rebels to a battle on a field of my own selection. A long time must elapse before I can do that.

General George McClellan, quoted in Civil War Journal: The Leaders

Lincoln said McClellan had “the slows.” While McClellan was stalling in the East, another general was winning victories in the West.

ONE AMERICAN’S STORY

That victorious Union general in the West was Ulysses S. Grant. In civilian life, he had failed at many things. But Grant had a simple strategy of war: “Find out where your enemy is, get at him as soon as you can, strike at him as hard as you can, and keep moving on.”

In February 1862, Grant made a bold move to take Tennessee. Using ironclad gunboats, Grant’s forces captured two Confederate river forts. These were Fort Henry on the Tennessee and Fort Donelson on the nearby Cumberland. (See map on next page.) The seizure of Fort Henry opened up a river highway into the heart of the South. Union gunboats could now travel on the river as far as northern Alabama. When the people of Nashville, Tennessee, heard the forts were lost, they fled the city in panic. A week later, Union troops marched into Nashville.
The Battle of Shiloh

After Grant’s river victories, Albert S. Johnston, Confederate commander on the Western front, ordered a retreat to Corinth, Mississippi. Grant followed. By early April, Grant’s troops had reached Pittsburg Landing on the Tennessee River. There he waited for more troops from Nashville. Johnston, however, decided to attack before Grant gained reinforcements. Marching his troops north from Corinth on April 6, 1862, Johnston surprised the Union forces near Shiloh Church. The Battle of Shiloh in Tennessee turned into the fiercest fighting the Civil War had yet seen.

Commanders on each side rode into the thick of battle to rally their troops. One Union general, William Tecumseh Sherman, had three horses shot out from under him. General Johnston was killed, and the command passed to General Pierre Beauregard. By the end of the day, each side believed that dawn would bring victory.

That night, there was a terrible thunderstorm. Lightning lit up the battlefield, where dead and dying soldiers lay in water and mud. During the night, Union boats ran upriver to ferry fresh troops to Grant’s camp. Grant then led an attack at dawn and forced the exhausted Southern troops to retreat.

The cost of the Union victory was staggering. Union casualties at Shiloh numbered over 13,000, about one-fourth of those who had fought. The Confederates lost nearly 11,000 out of 41,000 soldiers. Describing the piles of mangled bodies, General Sherman wrote home, “The scenes on this field would have cured anybody of war.” Congressmen criticized Grant for the high casualties and urged Lincoln to replace him. But Lincoln replied, “I can’t spare this man—he fights.”

The Fall of New Orleans

The spring of 1862 brought other bad news for the Confederacy. On April 25, a Union fleet led by David Farragut captured New Orleans, the largest city in the South. Rebel gunboats tried to ram the Union warships and succeeded in sinking one. Farragut’s ships had to run through cannon fire and then dodge burning rafts in order to reach the city. Residents stood on the docks and cursed the Yankee invaders, but they were powerless to stop them.

The fall of New Orleans was a heavy blow to the South. Mary Chesnut of South Carolina, the wife of an aide to President Davis, wrote in her diary, “New Orleans gone—and with it the Confederacy. Are we not cut in two?” Indeed, after the victories of General Grant and Admiral Farragut, only a 150-mile stretch of the Mississippi remained in Southern hands. The Union was well on its way to achieving its goal of cutting the Confederacy in two. But guarding the remaining stretch of the river was the heavily armed Confederate fort at Vicksburg, Mississippi.
Lee Claims Victories in the East

Meanwhile, also in the spring of 1862, McClellan finally made his move to try to capture Richmond. He planned to attack the Confederate capital by way of a stretch of land between the York and James rivers. McClellan succeeded in bringing his troops within a few miles of Richmond.

But in June 1862, Robert E. Lee took charge of the Army of Northern Virginia and proceeded to turn the situation around. Lee sent Jeb Stuart and his cavalry—soldiers on horseback—to spy on McClellan. With about 1,000 men, Stuart rode around the whole Union army in a few days and reported its size back to Lee. Lee then attacked McClellan’s army. The two sides clashed for a week, from June 25 to July 1, 1862, in what became known as the Seven Days’ Battles. The Army of Northern Virginia suffered heavier losses, but it forced McClellan’s army to retreat.

In late August, the Confederates won a second victory at Bull Run, and Union troops withdrew back to Washington. Within just a few months, Lee had ended the Union threat in Virginia.

Lee Invades the North

Riding a wave of victories, General Lee decided to invade the Union. He wrote to tell President Davis of his plan. Lee thought it was a crucial time, with the North at a low point. Without waiting for Davis’s response, Lee crossed the Potomac with his army and invaded Maryland in early September 1862.

Lee had several reasons for taking the war to the North. He hoped a victory in the North might force Lincoln to talk peace. The invasion would give Virginia farmers a rest from war during the harvest season. The Confederates could plunder Northern farms for food. Lee hoped the invasion would show that the Confederacy could indeed win the war, which might convince Europe to side with the South. By this time, both Britain and France were leaning toward recognizing the Confederacy as a separate nation. They were impressed by Lee’s military successes, and their textile industry was now hurting from the lack of Southern cotton.

Bloody Antietam

Soon after invading Maryland, Lee drew up a plan for his campaign in the North. A Confederate officer accidentally left a copy of Lee’s battle plans wrapped around three cigars at a campsite. When Union troops stopped to rest at the abandoned campsite, a Union soldier stumbled on the plans. The captured plans gave McClellan a chance to stop Lee and his army.
McClellan went on the attack, though he moved slowly as always. On September 17, 1862, at Antietam Creek near Sharpsburg, Maryland, McClellan’s army clashed with Lee’s. The resulting Battle of Antietam was the bloodiest day in all of American history. A Confederate officer later described the battle.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

Again and again . . . by charges and counter-charges, this portion of the field was lost and recovered, until the green corn that grew upon it looked as if it had been struck by a storm of bloody hail . . . From sheer exhaustion, both sides, like battered and bleeding athletes, seemed willing to rest.

John B. Gordon, quoted in Voices of the Civil War

After fighting all day, neither side had gained any ground by nightfall. The only difference was that about 25,000 men were dead or wounded. Lee, who lost as much as one-third of his fighting force, withdrew to Virginia. The cautious McClellan did not follow, missing a chance to finish off the crippled Southern army. Lincoln was so fed up that he fired McClellan in November, 1862. In the next chapter, you will learn about the historic action Lincoln took after the Battle of Antietam.
TERMS & NAMES

Briefly explain the significance of each of the following.
1. Fort Sumter 6. rifle
2. Robert E. Lee 7. ironclad
3. border state 8. Ulysses S. Grant
4. blockade 9. Battle of Shiloh
5. hygiene 10. Battle of Antietam

REVIEW QUESTIONS

War Erupts (pages 481–487)
1. How and when did the Civil War start?
2. What advantages did the North have at the beginning of the war?
3. What were the war strategies of the two sides?

Life in the Army (pages 488–492)
4. What was the typical Civil War soldier like?
5. Why did so many people volunteer to fight in the Civil War?
6. Why was the incidence of disease so high among Civil War soldiers?
7. How did the use of rifles and minie balls change war tactics?

No End in Sight (pages 493–497)
8. What goal of the Union strategy did Grant further, and how did he do it?
9. Why did the North have such a hard time capturing Richmond, Virginia?
10. How did Lee’s appointment to head the Army of Northern Virginia affect the course of the war?

CRITICAL THINKING

1. USING YOUR NOTES: COMPARING AND CONTRASTING

Using your completed chart, answer the questions.
a. Which side seemed likelier to win the war? Why?
b. Which side followed more closely its original strategy in the first two years of the war?

2. ANALYZING LEADERSHIP

Think about the leaders discussed in this chapter. Choose one. What character traits helped make him an effective leader?

3. APPLYING CITIZENSHIP SKILLS

Which individuals or groups of people demonstrated good and poor citizenship during the war? Explain your choices.

4. THEME: CITIZENSHIP

How could people on both sides of the Civil War believe that they were being good citizens by fighting?

5. MAKING DECISIONS

In your opinion, was Lincoln correct in deciding to go to war to save the Union? Explain your answer.

How did the consequences and effects of civil war that you predicted before you read the chapter compare with the actual conditions you read about?

VISUAL SUMMARY

The Civil War, 1861–1862

- March 4, 1861 Lincoln inaugurated.
- April 12, 1861 Fort Sumter fired upon by rebel forces.
- April 15, 1861 Lincoln calls on states to provide 75,000 militiamen.
- May 1861 Confederate Congress votes to secede.
- June 25 to July 1, 1862 Seven Days’ Battles
- July 21, 1861 First Battle of Bull Run (Manassas)
- August 28, 1861 Monitor and Merrimack clash.
- September 17, 1862 Battle of Antietam (Sharpsburg)
- October 16, 1862 Lincoln reelects McClellan of command.
- November 1862 Battle of Shiloh
- April 4, 1862 Fall of New Orleans
- February 1862 Union forces capture Fort Henry and Fort Donelson.
- March 9, 1862 Monitor and Merrimack (Virginia) clash.
- April 6, 1862 Battle of Shiloh
- April 25, 1862 Battle of Antietam (Sharpsburg)
- June 25 to July 1, 1862 Seven Days’ Battles
- December 26, 1861 Lincoln signs first Emancipation Proclamation
- March 4, 1861 Lincoln inaugurated.
STANDARDS-BASED ASSESSMENT

Use the map and your knowledge of U.S. history to answer questions 1 and 2.

Additional Test Practice, pp. S1–S33.

1. What does the arrow in the east indicate?
   A. movement of Union troops toward Richmond
   B. movement of resisting Confederate troops
   C. movement of Confederate troops to take New Orleans
   D. movement of Union troops up the Mississippi

2. Which of the following did the blockade prevent access to?
   A. border states
   B. Confederate states
   C. Union states
   D. Union troops

General George McClellan discusses his battle plan in this quotation. Use the quotation and your knowledge of U.S. history to answer question 3.

PRIMARY SOURCE

[S]oon as I feel that my army is well organized and well disciplined and strong enough, I will advance and force the Rebels to a battle on a field of my own selection. A long time must elapse before I can do that.

General George McClellan, quoted in Civil War Journal: The Leaders

3. Which of the following summarizes McClellan’s priority in leading his army into battle?
   A. He will lead his troops into battle quickly.
   B. He refuses to go into battle without more troops.
   C. He wants to feel confident in his army’s readiness for battle.
   D. He intends to make a surprise attack.

---

ALTERNATIVE ASSESSMENT

1. WRITING ABOUT HISTORY
   Assume the role of a soldier during the Civil War, either Union or Confederate, and write a letter home to your family.
   - Use library resources to find written accounts from soldiers during the Civil War.
   - Use what you learn to write your own letter. Include details about your daily life and your feelings about the war.

2. COOPERATIVE LEARNING
   Work in a small group to develop a compromise that would have resolved the conflict between the North and the South. Have one member of your group take the position of a Northerner, another a Southerner, and a third the mediator between the two.

INTEGRATED TECHNOLOGY

DOING INTERNET RESEARCH

Life in the army training camps during the Civil War was difficult. Use the Internet to research army life. Then create a presentation about an aspect army life.

- Find primary sources about life in the army, such as diaries, letters, photographs, and news articles.
- Choose a specific topic for your presentation. For example, you might focus on drawings, maps, and photos that show the design of a typical army camp, items used for cooking, lodging, sanitation, military drilling, and recreation, or firsthand accounts of camp life from letters and diaries.

For more about Civil War armies . . .